Chapter 1 by crimson

If you read this, that means you have survived until this point of your life. Please, be proud of yourself for that. No matter who you are, you deserve to live and you always deserved it. Tell this to anyone close to you. Tell them how much you value them, how much you love them.

Tell them before it's too late.

Austria. Vienna. Years before, it was considered as one of the cities overflowing with culture and classical art. Now it was just industrial wasteland, the city that once bloomed like a rose reached its life's end. It was not even acknowledged as a city. The whole country was wiped off the world map.

And this is where my story begins.

Chapter 2 by Katherine

It all started at our field trip to the Hofburg Palace when 3 of the kids in the group went missing. After they disappeared, an alarm sounded signaling for us to go into a lockdown. No one knew what was happening. The ground was shaking and we were all trying our best to remain calm although we knew something bad was coming. Pieces of art fell from the walls, smoke filled the room. One by one, people started to panic. Eventually, it was just me standing there in the middle of a destroyed museum.

Chapter 3 by Unique

I found myself in a beautiful garden filled with colorful blossoms. It's sand spread savour smell to my nose, all blossoms was seem dancing waveling on a amazing song. I was in astonishment how I couriered from Hofburg Palace to this fantasy garden...

Chapter 4 by Pigletpaige

Maybe it was magic. Or maybe it was just a dream. Whatever it was, I was there. The trees grew tall by the river and I could see small blinking lights from...fairies? I stepped forward into the willow tree and saw even closer the alluring lights. Their light intoxicated me to the point where I could hardly look away. There truly were little people like ones I had heard of in legends told to me by my mothers.

Chapter 5 by Jacqueline

I looked at the fairies in awe. This can't be real. Although people had just disappeared into thin air right in front of my eyes. So it could very well be real. The trees towered well over my head as I heard the sound of a small stream trickling into the river. The fairies hesitated as I neared them. They seemed almost scared. The fairies scurried into the trunks of trees. Something wasn't right... to my left I heard the trees start to rattle. And then... well. I will just say some creature came out. I noticed an animal a few feet away from the creature, it was small like a dragon. The creature was going to feed on it. If I didn't leave soon I would too become a feast. I ran trying to stay under the cover of the trees. I ran. I ran not realizing that this "wonderland" wasn't going to last forever.

I ran so fast I didn't realize the scenery changed. There were no trees or rivers. The land was covered in cranes and pipes. Concrete was spread over. Metal bars laying all over the ground. Abandoned buildings incomplete. Just a little crack was in-between the concrete. There was the start of an oak tree. And that was it. That was the last time I ever saw another tree.

Chapter 6 by Lil' Wilson

Then came the boys. There were only 3 of them. A short scrawny one named Boe, a tall skinny one named Justin and a average one named Al. They were all different but sound low the same. They were the only ones who knew about the abandoned houses and buildings.

i knew that i had to keep it professional and not awkward but i had this feeling, this value, this love for justen with his dark hair and sky blue eyes. But anyways i ran towards them and said that we didn't have much time to get out of here. There was no time to ask how they were or where they came from, or anything. As we started to run it was already too late the ground started to shake then all of a sudden Al fell threw the earth. It was a terrible scene, and the feeling inside of me of not being able to save him or at least try to.
